WATERTOWN LAMENTS BECAUSE OF ITS FAILURE TO DISCOVER SEC. LANSING

Watertown, N. Y., is lamenting because of its failure to appreciate Robert Lansing, present secretary of state, when he was a citizen of that town. Not long before he was called to Washington by President Wilson, Secretary Lansing ran for mayor of Watertown and was defeated by the subscription collector for a local newspaper.

Secretary Robert Lansing.

Sketches of Little OLD NEW YORK by M. McIntyre

NEW YORK, Sept. 8.—John D. Rockefeller has accused himself of a sin that Ida Tarbell, Upton Sinclair, Bouck White and Chairman Walsh overlooked. After listening to a sermon on the Prodigal Son at Tarrytown, he, in a moment of self-deprecation, confessed that he was like the poor, penitent prodigal.

Not a person who knows the Old King can imagine him—teacher of thrift and economy—leading the wayward career of the wasteful, joy-loving impulsive spendthrift of the nineteenth century of Luke. But he said it at any rate. Here are his words:

"I see in myself the prodigal son." James P. Slinnot, the sport writer, who has frequently seen pictures of John D. in his golf clothes declares that he may be the prodigal son, but he certainly hasn't the faded calf.

Bert Williams, the negro comedian, is the owner of a huge, high-powered automobile which he drives himself. He is extremely careful and never tries to dispute the right of way with others.

The other night he was driving home up Broadway after the theater. Excavations near Fifteenth street made it impossible for autos to pass at one point. Williams and another motorist met here.

The comedian immediately began to back to give the other the right of way and the other motorist also threw his car into reverse. They both started forward again and reached the narrow strip again at the same time.

Williams leaned over and couched the hood of the other automobile, crossed his fingers and said "Tag!"

Thus relieving a situation that was growing tense. Captain J. M. Churchill was standing out in front of his cabareted cafe the other night trying to coax a Broadway breeze his way when Louis Werba, a theatrical manager and nephew of A. L. Erlanger, passed.

"Hello Looney!" shouted Captain Churchill.

Werba stopped, walked back without speaking. "My name is Mr. Werba," he said haughtily.

Churchill wonderfully apologized and insisted on Werba going in and having a small concoction to heal his wounded feelings. He accepted and after the twin thirsts had been slaked Churchill was amazed to hear Werba say: "See Cap—that was an easy way to give you the 'work' for a drink."

And Churchill bought again.

The groundhogs who work at night digging tons of earth under Broadway are paid each morning as they go off duty. A group of them secured their pay the other morning and dropped into a moving picture show in the Herald Square district for a brief rest before going home. To their surprise the first picture they saw was themselves at work under ground.

As their picks and shovels fairly flew into the rough surface while the operator turned the crank, the men grew enthusiastic and several of them cheered.

An usher stepped down to them and bade them be quiet. "Gosh," said one "they call this a free cuntry and a man can't even cheer himself."

The old Hammerstein Variety theater is demolished. A wrecking company has leveled the creaky old walls and all that remains of the site that made the famous Oscar wealthy and gave London grand opera is a pile of sticks and stones.

The new Rialto, a moving picture theater, is to go up in its place, but Oscar and his high hat may be seen camping out each day on a nearby fire escape.
